

Quoting NaughtyPip

Took this trade at 12:30 ish, gmt. Just exited. Upthrust into 15 min trigger level, then another upthrust later on to retest the area, immediately after the upthrust a test candle low vol, entered on the break of that candle, further confirmation and a safer entry 2 candles later with a no demand bar. Pulled out at the squat bar.

Comments and critique appreciated.

The bar you have marked as a test is actually a hidden test or a ND as it is an upbar with a higher close than the upthrust. Also the UT is not confirmed until the second bar so based on that the ND you mention is the better / safer entry. The bar you mark as a squat is quite high volume for the spread but is an upbar which should show you that buyers were met with sellers and by itself would not be an immediate reason to exit. If anything if the low of this bar is taken out it could provide another short entry. The exit from this however could be that we had a wide spread downbar closing on it's lows followed by an upbar showing that there was hidden buying in that downbar... the fact that we had all that effort to rise on the next bar however confuses the fact since we obviously found buyers but they seem to have been met on that upbar.

Edit... the ND also printed below the Hull and it appears to have the same high as the highest volume upbar to the left (2 bars before the first UT you have marked)... ND into a trigger.