

First sorry for the bars being a bit small on this chart but in order to show all of Thursday and the start of Friday's trading I had to zoom out. This post is not about any specific VSA entry but instead it is a 5min chart on which I marked the 4 highest volume bars from LO to London close and I also marked the 2 highest volume bars up in the daily high zone. I am sure that Beljevina would be proud with all the pretty colors 🤪 and lines but I did this to show just how many triggers can be created during a day and how they are tested and serve as support and resistance throughout the day.

Can you see the entries? Can you spot the various reactions at these trigger levels. I even marked on in red what was the London high... see what price does later in the day at this level. This level was created on high volume but in no way was it ultra high or even remotely close to the highest volume of the day but yet price still respected it. This is why I use more than just high volume triggers in my trading and why I have written several posts showing the strength of levels like daily open, previous day H/L, swing H/L's and even session H/L's...

Anyway take a look at see what jumps out.

Attached Image (click to enlarge)

