I was checking this entry, but I wasn't sure about it because on the 1D candles, I saw that the green line had just crossed below the red one on the TDI. I thought they should be aligned in some way—at least pointing in the same direction. Shouldn't I take that into account too?

Thanks!

Hi Emmanuel,

I've set up the TMS Monitor as per your instructions in the previous posts.

Here's what I've done so far:

- Opened 3 charts for EURUSD (D1, H4, H1) and applied the TMS Monitor template to each.
- Added an additional H4 chart for EURUSD to help space them evenly.
- Pressed Alt + R and saved the setup as a profile.

I've uploaded a screenshot for my charts and for the my Expert Advisor settings, could you kindly check if the settings are correct and let me know if any adjustments are needed?

If possible, could you also share your .set file for reference?

Once I finish testing with the TMS Monitor, I plan to start working on the TMS_V19 MTF EA—under your guidance, of course.

I know that I still have a lot to learn, and I appreciate your patience as I catch up.

Thanks in advance.

@Tekkies

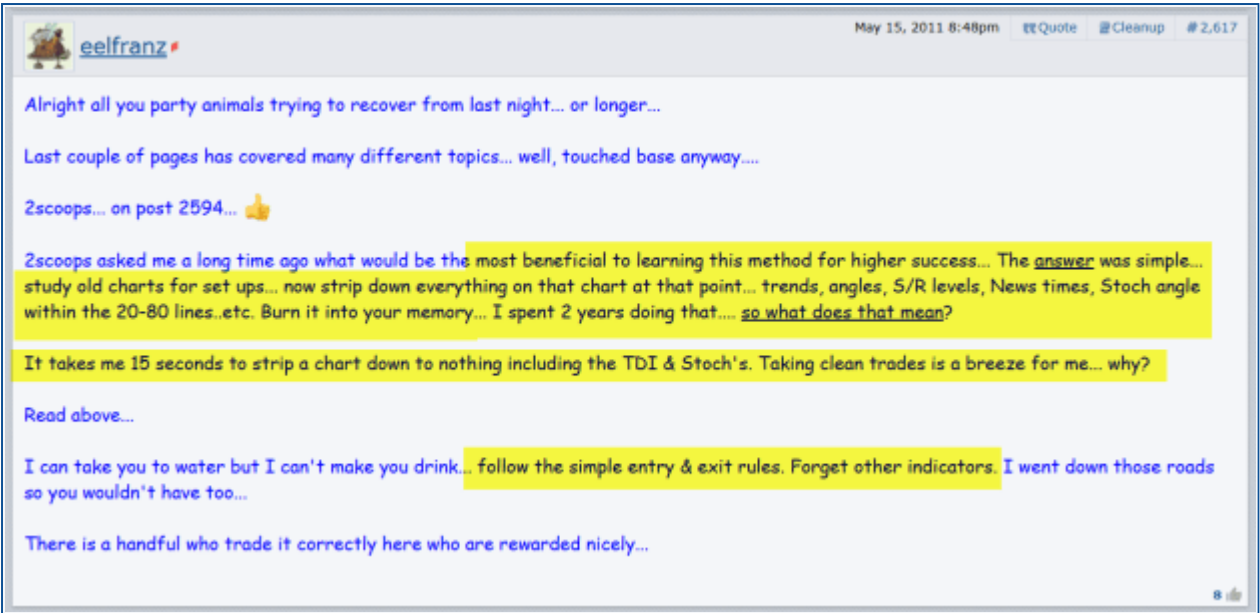

You are making it complicated for yourself.

You have been here for almost 10 years here you should be able to follow post #2617. No need for the blue and yellow line on your price chart. You are repeating the same mistakes you made with using the TDI ... that is self-sabotage !

For higher success get rid of that nonsense TDI on chart.

When do you intend to go live with USD10,000 account deposit?

Thank you so much for your help, @Tekkies. It's truly a privilege to receive this kind of support for free here on the forum.

I've understood everything perfectly, and I'll make sure to check all those points before taking another trade.

I'll definitely come back here to ask about future setups.

That said, I'd like to ask one more thing if I may:

Lately, I've noticed that the TDI on H4 and Daily often show opposite signals. For example, the Daily TDI might just be crossing above the red line (or moving upwards above it), while the H4 TDI is crossing below the red line in the opposite direction.

Does this mean I shouldn't take any trades when this happens?

Should I wait until the TDI is moving in the same direction on both H4 and Daily, and the overall trend is aligned as well?

In other words, should I only take a long trade if:

- The TDI on H4 is crossing up (candle 1 or 2),
- The TDI on Daily is also pointing up or already crossed,
- And the general price trend is bullish?

Thanks again in advance!

Answer : NO. There is no such thing as 'solid' entry'.

You need to pick only the best A+++ setups which have the ten(10) elements.

Good advice is always welcome

According to the OP' post #647 when wanting to take a TDI trade you need to know the basic forex stuff and must complete the babypips.com School of Pipsology .

Upon graduation, you need to practice, practice, practice, until you have reached the intermediate+ level, ... and have mastered the 5-Method.

Most traders here failed because they have not done the thousands of hours of live practice.

You are new to Trading Made Simple, so start at the beginning and do it right the first time.

If you read the OP posts and learn from where he started the 5-Method in the other thread, your chart should be in the proper chronological order.
